

3 STEPS TO A BETTER RELATIONSHIP WITH YOUR TEEN!

Has your relationship been a struggle with you teen? Have they made you so mad and angry that you are ready to call it quits?! Well, hold on, don't throw in the towel just yet! Here are three keys to help you have a better relationship with your teen!

1. Talk to your teen NOT at your teen!

We all want the same thing when it comes to any conversation...Respect! That is a two way street. We can't expect to get respect when we don't give respect And nobody likes to be talked down to, or likes to be made to feel stupid! Hey, don't get me wrong, teens can be stupid! I know / was stupid as a teenager! Even though I didn't think so! And that is pretty much what every teen thinks at some point or another! The ironic thing is they think we are the stupid one! HA! We adults know better! And because we know better, we should really be aware of the way we talk to our teens. Even though it can be very difficult having a conversation with them, as they roll their eyes, look into the air at nothing, or look at you but not at you, or just flat out ignore you! And yet we still LOVE them!

Here are a few tips to help you “talk” to your teen...

1. Calm yourself BEFORE engaging in a conversation. Go outside, take some deep breaths, think about how you can say what you want to say in a manner they will hear. If you are mad and angry, you will talk mad and angry. You will be at a high level of anxiousness and they will be at that same level and climb up from there. You can NOT have a productive conversation in anger!
2. Now that you are calm, you can ask good questions about the situation. Like...how did this happen? What is your part in the situation? What are you going to do to make it right? NOT...what is wrong with you?! Are you stupid? Are you ever gonna grow up? Those are NOT helpful questions! They may make you feel better, but it is not helping the situation.

3. Be sensible. Don't make idle threats...like, you are grounded from your phone for the day, and you never take it away. You can't see your boyfriend/girlfriend tonight, and you turn around and let them go with them an hour later. Yes, please, by all means discipline your child, but not unrealistically...like saying, you can't have your phone for 6 months, or you are never going to drive again! You may "feel" that way! But, are you really going to do those things? Probably not! So follow through with what you say and put action to your words.

2. Say the big bad words, "I'm Sorry," and mean it!

Saying those rotten words, "I'm...sorry" is never easy! The mere fact that, I have to say I'm sorry automatically makes some of us angry, thinking, What?! Why do I have to say sorry?!! I wasn't the one who did anything wrong! That sometimes is in the eyes of the beholder. If we ask our kids how often do they hear us say we are sorry, we might be surprised on the answer. And, that's why we don't ask! There are a few (ok, more than a few) reasons why we need to say I'm sorry! Not so you can have your teen walk all over you, or that you say it all out of guilt, or because you say it so often that it has lost any creditable standing. We need to say it because, if we don't say it, why do our teens need to say it? They don't! We can't expect them to say it, if we NEVER say it! We always lead by example, not because we want too, but because that is the automatic roll of the parent.

Here is the awesome thing about saying "I'm sorry" to your teen, walls come down and they see a humble side of you that softens them and makes them feel like, WOW, they do care and they do know when they are wrong, and actually had the guts to admit it! Who doesn't admire humility? This gives them a new perspective on how they see you. And it starts to open communication and trust. If there is no trust there is no communication...productive communication, anyway.

Now this doesn't have to be a one time thing, and you never say it again. You say I'm sorry, because, maybe over reacted, or because you shouldn't have said what you said, cuz words really do hurt, at any age, especially from the parent! When you say "I'm sorry", be specific about what you are sorry for. For example: Go to them, and say, I just want you to know I was wrong in the way I acted (or for what I said to you). I should have never acted that way (or said that to you), and I really wanted you to know I'm sorry, and I will work on my actions and words. Simple as that! End of story! Humbly walk away. Do not sit and wait for a response and get mad if they don't throw their arms around you and say, you are forgiven, thanks for bearing your inner most feelings.

Because, you will more than likely be disappointed! Say it because you mean it, and because you want to build the gap between you and them!

3. LISTEN!

Yes, Listen!! I can't even stress this enough!! LISTEN! LISTEN! LISTEN! You can't listen when you are doing all the talking! We as parents tend to talk and talk and talk annd talk until we don't even know what we are really even talking about anymore! That, my friend is called "rambling"! Who wants to hear that? Uh, nobody! To be effective in what you are going to say, SHUT UP! Seriously! I had to learn that too! Believe you me, It's not easy! But what a difference it makes when you learn to be QUITE, without an attitude, (you know what I'm talking about, sitting there looking at them with a smug look on your face, thinking, yeah, I'm listening ...and we wonder where they get it from!) and you really do listen to what your teen has to say.

It's amazing the things they will say when we actually give them a chance to speak! They will talk IF we let them!!! And they will shut down IF we do NOT listen!

Listening, I think is the most difficult of the three, because you have to stop talking in order to listen! And most of the time we think we have to keep talking in order for them to listen! Which is completely false!

How many times have you wanted your teen to talk to you? How many times have you asked them to talk to you? How many times have you taken the time to REALLY listen to what they had to say? Did you hear the unspoken words or the hurt in their tone? Did you see the deep sadness in their eyes, or the frustration of not being heard? Did you? There is nothing more a teenager wants then to be heard and loved. And that is why they will go find someone who "loves" them and will "listen" to them in places they shouldn't be!

Here are pointers on how to listen...

1. When you ask a question, do not answer the question yourself. Be OK in the silence. Sometimes they really are thinking of what to say, they just need a little time to process what you said, to know how-to answer.

2. You can start the conversation by saying, “I am going to let you talk, I am not going to interrupt you or make any comments.” Then hold true to that!!! Be a man or woman of your word! Remember, you lead by example!
3. Let them talk!!! You may not agree with what they are saying, and that’s ok, you don’t have too. Stay calm and really listen. Do not take anything personal. Take the focus off yourself, but remember you said you were going to let them talk!
4. Do NOT mock them! What they have to say is important to them, and it should be to you. Give them a chance to say what they are thinking and feeling. It may take a moment for them to open up, and get their thoughts in order, because this is new for them, and they may be testing the waters to see if they can trust you. You can’t get into their world if you are not willing to listen to them about their world.
5. After they have said what they need to say, some things you can respond with are... “thanks for talking to me” or “I’m glad I shut up so you could talk” or “I’m sorry for not listening to you sooner, because what you have to say is important to me” (don’t say this unless YOU MEAN IT! because they know if you do or don’t!). Then STOP! Do NOT keep talking!! Short and sweet is what they need in order to hear you! I’m going to say that again...Short and sweet is what they need in order to hear YOU! Give them a hug, say, I love you, and end it! Nothing more!!! For real! Shush! Silence! Zip It! Are you getting it??! GOOD! They will appreciate it, even if they don’t say it! let them the see a change in you, which in turn makes a change in them!

Are you ready to find out more information about a Rewind into Relationship Workshop? Are you ready to Rewind your Relationship with your Teen and attend or host a Workshop? Contact me, Shawna Partlow at shawna@shawnapartlow.com to find out more information!